Stage Robbers Passed With a Rush and Ranch Thieves Foiled by Silence and Prayer.

New York Herald: Some years ago my father and I were traveling in the west, and stopped at a bright little town in Wyoming territory, undecided in which direction to go next.

1 wanted very much to explore the northern part of Wyoming, including the Black Hills, and close the trip with a visit to the National Park at the end of August.

But my father had lent his ear to wonderful stories concerning a new mining camp in Colorado, where discoveries of fabulous richness were affirmed to have been

My father's arguments prevailed. He went on first with his friend hienderson and the teamsters, who were taking down the summer's merchandise for the stores, and after a few weeks he sent for me. It was not deemed quite safe for a woman to travel alone through that region, so my father engaged to put me under the escort of his friend hienderson when he should make his next trip.

gaged to put me under the escort of his friend Henderson when he should make his next trip.

It was about the middle of May when the gentleman came to the hotel and told me to be ready for the 5 o'clock stage the next morning. Promptly at the time appointed I was on the plazza waiting.

Presently the stage, with rearing, prancing horses, dashed round the corner and drew up at the steps. There were three men going to Camp El Dorado—my destination—and a man and woman to Cummings' Station, our first stop.

The stage took the road directly across the plains, he ading for the mountoin range that formed its southern boundary. We had ridden about an hour over the hard gravelly road, when the stage suddenly halted in front of a ranch house. The male passengers got out, and the driver got down from his stagebox to listen to what the ranchman was sayirg. Their voices were too low for us to catch the drift of their talk, but when the passengers came back there was a look of anxiety upon their faces that startled me. Perhaps this mode of travel over lonely mountain roads was not safe after all, and visions of stage robbers and Indians and grizzly bears began to frighten me a little.

"Have you got as good grit as your

"Have you got as good grit as your father, Miss?" asked Henderson, as he leaned across to me.
"I think so," I replied. "What is the matter?"

"Well, there's been a couple of stage robbers laying in jail over at Newtown for the last two months, but Skeleton back there says they broke jail yesterday and are up in the Black Forest. He says one of Schermerhorn's cowboys was over here at 5 o'clock this morning and said he'd seen a smoke from the foot of Horr's hill, and caught sight of them just below the thickest part of the forest, which is their favorite place for holding up drivers. If that's so it looks as if we are in for a fight this afternoon."

"Can't the stage go some other way?"

"There's never been but one road cut through Black Forest. The trees are so thick you can't see the sun. We'd have to go forty miles straight north to go round the mountain, and there's no stage road there."

"Why don't you lay up at Cummings and catch the men?"
"Never catch those fellows in Black Forest. They know every inch of ground, and could shoot a whole regiment before you could get at them."
"What will they do—kill us," I asked.
"Well. I guess not that bad. What they

But this bag of gold was much more difficult to conceal.

"How large is the bag?" I asked. Thompson drew it out of his pocket. I could hold it easily in my palm, but it was so heavy I nearly dropped it.

"Well, I will try to hide it for you," I said. I put it in my traveling bag, and when we stopped for dinner I went to a room in the hotel and transferred the precious bag to a pocket in the lining of my dress, which I recollected my far-sighted grandmother had put there.

It was about 3 o'clock in the afternoon when, after a steady climb of some miles up the steep ridge of mountains that divided the park horizontally, we entered Black Forest. It was a stretch of twenty-five miles through this wilderness, for we ran due west along the ridge of the mountain range till we came opposite the centre of the southern portion of the park, when the road descended and wound about for fifty miles through the undulating plain, itself broken by mountains and hills of lesser sizes in every direction.

I confess it was not without some fear that I saw the stage plunge into this wilderness. To add to our discomfiture a heavy rain began to fall, and we had not proceeded a half hour's journey before it became so dark we could not see fifty feet ahead of us.

The driver leaned back in his ssat, with became so dark we could not see fifty feet ahead of us.

The driver leaned back in his ssat, with eyes and cars alert, and let the reins all loose, for the horses knew their way better than he could guide them in the darkness. We went on in an almost unbroken silence for over an hour, and then I noticed that the men had their revolvers out. Henderson sat at one window and Thompson at the other. As we came to the foot of Horr's hill they raised the weapons to the window sill and rested them upon it with their barrels pointing into the heavy darkness without. darkness without.

Another hour passed wearily by. We had reached the summit of the hill and were well along its ridge. Indeed, the men had begun to breathe more freely, for we were scarcely a mile from the first clearing, when there was a sudden noise, cornecting that sounded like a shoul and we were scarcery a mine from the first clearing, when there was a sudden noise, something that sounded like a shout, and a loud crackling in the bushes.

The coach gave a tremendous lunge and the horses tore like mad through the woods. On, on they flew as if possessed of supernatural power. The men clung to their revolvers with pale faces and bated breath. A moment more and they sprang out into the clearing, and we knew we were safe, for over the hill top we could see the ranchmen's houses. The driver got down and caressed his horses as they stood there trembling from head to foot. The passengers stepped out and looked about and came to the conclusion that our scare must have been over a grizzly bear rather than robbers, else we should not have escaped so easily.

The stage then began its descent, and just before the twilight settled into the darkness of night the coach rolled up at the ranch, where we stopped for the night.

This stage carried the mails and its comtaining the stage carried the ng was the occasion of the gathering of c wboys from all parts of the park and mountains thereabout. There were full fifty of them there that night, and before 10 o'clock they were nearly all drunk. There was but one other woman on the place—the ranchman's wife. Her bed was in the dining room and I was to sleep with her, for there were no private apartments in this cabin.

place—the ranchman's wife. Her bed was in the dining room and I was to sleep with her, for there were no private apartments in this cabin.

When we went to bed I laid off my dress but took the precious bag of gold under my pillow, and committed myself in prayer to the great and tender Father who protects His children. I asked especially in prayer that night that I might be enabled to preserve, untouched, the money committed to my care. The lights were burning in the dining room all night, and once some one came in, but went out again.

It was well in the night when I was awakened by hearing voices. I looked up over my head in the direction of the sound. The bed was close to the cabin wall, and just above my pillow the mud chinks had failen out from between the logs. Nearly opposite this hole two men were standing and I could hear what they were saying.

"D——it! We've got nothing from the other fellows, suppose we try her?"

"I don't believe she's got anything, and it she should raise a rumpus we'd have a big fight before morning."

"Where's she sleepin'?"

"In this room here with Saunder's wife." They walked over to the window then; I heard their voices a few moments longer, and then their footsteps died away. I was fully aware of the gravity of my position, but I was powerless to help myself. Henderson and his party were no match for haif hundred lawless, intoxicated men, armed with murderous weapons, and I knew I could not hope for protection from them. I knew of nothing better to do than to keep still. Once more I prayed earnestly, and with one hand grasping the precious bag I laid still until morning. When daylight dawned the ranchman's wife arose, and I followed her, quietly transferring the bag from the pillow to my dress again.

At breaktast Henderson looked anxiously across the horses' backs and dashed forward at highest speed. Then Henderson toid me what had happened.

All the men, cowboys and all, slept together in a loft. Five times that night had the regues gone through their satchels, and even thei

Fierce Scoring of the Editor for His Free Criticism of Republican Leaders. In the course of a recent interview regarding the action of the senate in refusing to confirm Mr. Halstead's nomination to the German mission, Senator Ingalis said: "Mr. Halstead for the past quarter of a century has been distinguished for his denunciation of republican leaders whenever he differed with them in their opinions of measures. His denunciations of Grant, Lincoln, Logan, and others who have been illustrious in arms and in statesmanship are historical. He, in effect, counseled the assassination of Lincoln. His motives may have been good, but his judgment certainly has not been approved by the verdict of has not been approved by the verdict of mankind. In the Payne case in 1888, the question was not whether the election of the Ohio legislature was pure or corrupt. It was one of law and of precedent only under the usages and the procedure of the senate in similar cases. Three reports were made by the senate committee. A majority of the republican members of the committee reported against an investigation, a majority of the republican members of the senate sustained this report. Mr. Halstead immediately characterized the action of those republicans who voted to sustain the report as corrupt. He declared in effect, if not in direct terms. could shoot a whole regiment before you could get at them."

"What will they do—kill us." I asked.
"Well, I guess not that bad. What they want is the money. You see, we've got a good deal with us to-day. Between us here we're taking down about $2,000 into the camp, and it will go hard if we lose it. Would you mind keeping it for us." They are less likely to touch you than us. Thompson's got it here in a bag in gold." I thought a moment. My father had $200 of my own. This was in bills, and I had carefully secreted it in my cothing. But this bag of gold was much more difficult to conceal.

"How large is the bag?" I asked. Thompson drew it out of his pocket. I could hold it easily in my palm, but it was so heavy I nearly dropped it.

HOME TESTIMONY

HELENA, Oct. 7, 1887.

I was suffering from an unusually bad cough, my lungs were sore and congested, and I consulted one of the best physicians in Helena, whose prescriptions failed to relieve me. I became alarmed, and at the suggestion of a friend purchased a bottle of Acker's English Remedy for coughs, and after taking it according to directions was completely cured. I therefore cheerfully recommend it.

JACOB SWITZER.

I had a racking cough and inflamed throat and bought a bottle of Acker's English Remedy upon the recommendation of a friend, and was entirely cured by it. I consider it a never failing remedy for a cough.

An Express on of Delight. "About a week ago," says a Los Angeles, Cal., druggist, "a Chinaman came in with a lame shoulder. I sold him a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and guaranteed that it would cure him. He came in again last night, and as soon as he got inside the door began to swing his arms over his head like an Indian club swinger. I thought the blamed fool had a fit, but he finally stopped long enough to say: "Medicine velly fine, velly fine; alle same make me feel plenty good." Chamberlain's Pain Balm is without an equal for sprains, rheumatism, aches, pains or lame back. For sale by H. M. Parchen & Co.

B. M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo., says: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."

Mrs. S. A. Rock, of Anderson, Texas, writes: "At the age of 34, in Monroe, La., I had a severe attack of swamp, or malarial, fever. After I got well my hair commenced coming out, and so continued until it had well nigh all gone. I used several kinds of hair restorers, but they did no good. A friend gave me a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor. Before finishing the first bottle my hair began to grow, and by the time I used three bottles, I had a fine head of hair."
